Submitting an article for a thematic edition of the Green European Journal

Thematic editions of the Green European Journal are released three times a year, in printed and online versions. The editions explore a topic in depth from different analytical and cultural perspectives gathered from around Europe and beyond.

Anyone can submit an article, and we welcome submissions from people of any background, occupation or political affiliation. We also welcome suggestions for republications of texts previously published elsewhere, if they are within the relevant field.

Before submitting an article however, we urge you to carefully read the requirements and checklist below. This will maximise the chances of your article being approved for publication in the edition. The final decision regarding publication, however, always lies with the editorial board and editor-in-chief.

WHAT SHOULD I WRITE ABOUT?

Please refer carefully to the call for papers when determining your topic. Articles in the editions generally fall into one of three broad topics:

- Analysis (maximum 2,500 words)
- Interviews (maximum 2,500 words)
- Opinion pieces (maximum 1,500 words)

Before getting started with your article, we would encourage you to send us a short pitch (GEJ[AT]GEF.EU) outlining your chosen topic or line of argument, to get some feedback first.

WHAT TONE OR STYLE SHOULD THE ARTICLE ADOPT?

The Green European Journal aims to provoke debate and discussion, and this should be kept in mind when writing or submitting your article. Try to keep technical or academic language to a minimum, and where you have to use such language, try to include an explanation or reference for those not familiar with such terminology.

The Green European Journal uses UK (British) English. Questions about grammar and language are resolved by use of the following European style guide.

WHAT LANGUAGE SHOULD I WRITE IN?

At present, articles may be submitted in English, French, German, Dutch, Polish, Italian, Portuguese and Spanish. If your article is written in a different language, you may still submit it, but please provide a short accompanying summary of the article in one of the above languages.
